THE COMING ELECTION

This autumn's congressional elections promise to be one of the most significant in the country's history. The President has produced an issue for the American people, quite clearly.

Stung by defeats in Congress, of bills he considered vital to his program, the President is calling upon supporters of his program to elect members to Congress this fall who will pass these bills in 1963-64.

Anyone familiar with history will know that only once in this century has the party in power increased its majority in Congress in an off-year, that is a year in which there was no presidential election. The occasion was when Franklin D. Roosevelt added to his majority in the congressional elections of 1934, in the heyday of the New Deal.

So President John Kennedy is taking on a big effort when he seeks to get the votes he wants in this fall's elections. He has said, rightly, that if the people want the program he is pushing then they will speak for it in the fall.

Thus the stage is set for a momentous election in the United States later in the year. The people will truly determine whether the bills the President is sponsoring will get through Congress. And if they do not give the Democrats a mandate they will have said that the people do not want this program.

NORSTAD BOWS OUT

General Lauris Norstad has given up the ghost, as far as leading the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. His resignation, effective November 1st, has been sent to President John F. Kennedy. It has been accepted with official regret by the President.

There is little doubt the regrets might be a bit more official than real. For one difference which has begun to seperate Norstad and the White House circles is a basic difference, and centers on the advisability of NATO nuclear strike force.

General Norstad believes strongly this was a proposition Washington should push with all its energy, for several reasons. First, it may be the only way to keep Germany out of the nuclear arms race.

It is a logical way to wean France away from her independent nuclear arms policies, if only to a degree. Third, it will give NATO a force and a unity, and a joint policy which might well be vital in maintaining that organization's strength and solidarity. Fourth, it will do much to prevent West Germany from getting gasoline from any oil completely into the arms of President Charles de Gaulle, who is now free to woo Germany while the United States openly expresses distrust of Germany and talks with Communist Russia about barring nuclear weapons from its ally.

It was reported that Kennedy, backed up the State Department in opposing Norstad's strong pleas for a NATO nuclear strike force. This and other factors, including the consideration that he has already served six years in the post led to Norstad's resignation.

ALLIANCE FOR DICTATORSHIP

The grotesque features of the United States' Alliance For Progress program appear on the horizon when such events as the latest military takeover in Peru are viewed.

Everyone would be in favor of the Alliance For Progress if it meant that U. S. dollars given and loaned to Latin, American would work for, and obtain, democracy and individual freedom in those countries.

But we are embarking on this aid program when democracy has no satisfactory history in most of Latin America and where military takeovers are the rule, not the exception. In recent months two of the most prominent South American countries have been taken over by military juntas.

Both were supposedly democracies. Both have been greatly helped by our dollars in the past. Now a military junta is running each country and putting to use our aid dollars and their pesos, for the past, as they see fit.

Washington has suspended aid to Peru even after the junta took over there but we did not suspend aid to Argentina when Senator Guido usurped the constitution of the country and refused to accept the results of an election—a fair and democratic election.

The governments (perhaps better today and even tomorrow) which they will reform and so we send them money but there is actually little justification for it in many of these countries, at least.

Oil dilution is one of the major causes of excessive engine wear, says Jim Smith. This is true, he says, whether it is your tractor car, truck, or lawn engine in question.

Dilution may be caused by an over-rich fuel mixture due to a faulty choke, clogged air cleaner or a poorly adjusted carburetor. It may also be due to incomplete burning of the fuel due to misfiring sparkplugs.

Unburned gasoline from any of these causes may wash away the protective oil film on cylinder walls. This leaves pistons, rings and cylinder walls unprotected and causes a rapid rate of wear. It also thins down the oil in the crankcase which means less protection for bearings, valves, and other critical engine parts.

An over-rich fuel mixture does not burn clean. A good tip-off to this condition is an engine puffing out black smoke—a sign of rich mixture, and probably oil dilution.

Dirty air filters, says Smith are a common cause of rich mixtures and loss of power in engines. Air cleaners on tractors and other engines operated in dusty conditions should be serviced at least once daily, and more often under severe conditions.

Malfunctioning or misfiring of sparkplugs, another cause of power loss and oil dilution, can often be prevented by replacing sparkplugs at the recommended interval of 250 hours.

The complete ignition system, the breaker points, condensers, and timing, should be serviced at recommended intervals. Improper adjustment of carburetors is another cause of high fuel consumption and power loss, as well as dilution of oil. Automatic chokes should be kept operating properly. They aid in starting, but as the engine warms up, they should discontinue choking. Engines with manual chokes should not be operated with the choke "out" after the engine warms up.

How about your engine cooling system? Has it been drained and flushed recently?

Engines can be damaged from overheating; and much damage can also be caused by operating thermostats. Operating an engine at too low a temperature can cause crankpisk fouling, oil dilution, excessive wear, and a waste of fuel.

Thermostats allow an engine to warm up quickly and should not be removed, even in hot weather. Unless you are using one of the new rust and anti-freezing, the cooling system should be drained and replaced with clean water and a rust preventive solution (arrives summers months. Radiator hoses, pressure cane, fan belts, and fans should all be checked often for best operation.

The cooling fins of air-cooled engines should be kept clean and free of dirt, dust, and chaff just as the cooling fins of thersdiator. On many air-cilled engines, the air shroud can be removed for ease in cleaning.

Remember, poor maintenance can rob you of power and may cost an additional 40 percent more in fuel.

Says Smith, "As a preventative measure, study and observe the recommendations outlined in your engines operators' manual. Most of these manuals give definite procedures with a timetable to follow in checking the various items. An engine properly maintained may also save you a costly delay a rush season."
